Recent changes to the Department of Defense Information Security Program

The Department of Defense Information Security Program is laid out in Department of Defense Manual 5200.01 (DoDM 5200.01). It is divided into four volumes covering different areas of the program. The manual was initially published and released in February 2012. Over the years, some of the volumes have had changes made. When these changes are made, the volume is re-released. The cover page of the volume being changed will have added under the original release date "Incorporating Change", then the change number and changed volume's new release date. This is different from other documents where we are used to seeing a revision letter.

In January of this year, volumes 1 and 3 were re-released with new changes made. In our GSA certification course, we take a look at volume 3. Since that volume was changed, I thought it was worth mentioning. There are no changes that affect what we cover in class, but for those who like to keep up with the latest, I've made them available on our website.

I often find out about changes and updates from our students and former students. So today I say, "thank you" to ... you know who you are.

Links to pdf copies of DoDM 5200.01, Volume 1 and Volume 3 can be found below.
